Mt. Miguel band heading for Olympics in Spain and an Italian excursion

Over half of Mt. Miguel High School's band members are packing up their instruments and heading for the Olympics in Barcelona, Spain, as well as additional performances in Italy.

Fund-raising efforts over the last two years have dropped some funds into the bucket for 68 of the band's approximately 120 members who will play in parades and concerts from July 1-16.

According to band director Roy Anthony, the invitation to perform in cultural art activities in Rosas, Spain, in conjunction with the Olympics, came from World Discovery Tours about two years ago.

The company had heard about the Mt. Miguel band from its performance in Washington D.C.'s Independence Day Parade. They've also invited the band to Germany for a 1993 unification celebration, but Anthony says the band will have to pass on that event.

"It takes a good 1 1/2 years to raise the money - it's too expensive to do very often," he said.

Carol Beard, band "mother" in charge of fund raising, said that the $2,600-per-band member price tag has only been offset by about $93 per member and per chaperon. The $17,000 raised to date for the trip has come from both private donations and corporation solicitations, and donations are still being accepted.

Among corporation gifts were $5,000 from ARCO Corp., $1,000 from Ricoh Corp., and about $1,300 from a fund raiser done by the San Diego Railroad Museum to benefit the band.

"We've also had a lot of private donations from the trailer park across the street from the school and from parents and alumni," said Beard, explaining that the band's continual garage sales and auctions are just for general fund expenses such as their new uniforms which they will be wearing for the first time on their trip.

The band's itinerary includes stops in Rome, Genoa, and Florence, Italy.

"The Consul General of Italy initially invited us to perform at the World Expo in Genoa, but in all the confusion, we're not sure if that is still the case, or if we will be in parades in the other cities," said Beard.

Their days will include marching in various parades and performing 45-minute concerts, yet according to Anthony, there will be "plenty of time for sightseeing."

In addition to the eight designated chaperons, about 90 other family members and friends will be traveling with the band.

Lemon Grovan named to state Board of Corrections

Lemon Grove resident Louise Fyock was recently appointed to the state Board of Corrections by Governor Pete Wilson.

The founder/director of a resource center which aids ex-prisoners in re-establishing their lives, Fyock believes she has the expertise to serve on the board which basically sets the standards of operations for jails as well as the training methods of correctional and probation officers.

"The board tackles tough issues such as jail overcrowding. I'd like the board to look at innovative ways of having the inmates pay for their incarceration so that the taxpayers don't have to become victims by paying for that," she said.

Pleased with having been selected, Fyock is surprised at the swiftness of her appointment.

"I was asked to interview for the position and submitted an application only two weeks ago -

I was told it would probably be several months before an appointment was made."

Fyock created her center - the Community Connection Resource Center - in 1985 after having worked for nine years at a similar agency - Project Jove - also in San Diego.

Currently completing her master's degree in public administration with an emphasis on criminal justice at San Diego State University, she has been serving on the County Justice System Advisory Board for the last three years. She is also a member of the American Correctional Association; the California Probation, Parole and Correctional Association; and the National Association for Justice Volunteers.

About a year ago, Fyock received the 10Friends leadership award (Channel 10) for her resource center's service to the community.

Concerts in the Park play again

Lemon Grove residents turned out in force to hear "Popular Demand" as they kicked off the series of four concerts in the park. The concerts are enjoyed by all ages, as the photos above show. The next concert is on July 7 with the "Coolrays," and the city of Lemon Grove will celebrate its 15th anniversary. Don't miss it.

Small businesses in need may get help from new Community Development Corporation

The Bankers Small Business Community Development Corp. (BSBCDC), a 24-bank organization which will fund small business loans, especially loans for minority and women-owned enterprises, throughout the county, incorporated June 10 and offer its first loans later in the month.

The organization is comprised of 20 local and four statewide banks, which have each attained approval from their individual regulatory agencies including the U.S. Office of the Comptroller of Currency (OCC) and the California State Banking Department.

The BSBCDC will be directed by a 12-member board of directors with input from a wide-ranging community advisory board. Members of the advisory board will assist in marketing loans in targeted areas and in providing feedback on performance to the board of the BSBCDC.

Membership will include representatives from various community and government organizations with ties to economic development.

With a loan pool of $570,000, the for-profit organization will provide small businesses with micro-loans from $5,000 to $50,000 and assistance with gap financing for Small Business Administration and state-guaranteed loans.

The BSBCDC is the first organization of its kind in the state to obtain regulatory approval. Fledgling multi-bank CDCs in other areas of the nation, including Los Angeles, Utah and Arizona among others have sought the advice of BSBCDC organizers to establish similar organizations.

"We applaud the banks who put together the CDC in San Diego," said Larry Kurnel, executive director of the California Bankers Association. "The San Diego BSBCDC is the first in California to obtain regulatory approval. We have asked them to share information with other California banks so that they too can develop these organizations."

Loans provided by the BSBCDC will be packaged and serviced by the CDC Small Business Finance Corp. A loan development specialist, Jeni D. Roberson has been hired to provide outreach to minority and women-owned businesses. For more information on loan packages, call Roberson at (619) 291-3594.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Although this commentary was written for La Mesa, the reader can substitute Lemon Grove in his/her mind, as Lemon Grove's revenue sources are being equally threatened.

Lemon Grove's new mayor, new City Council and city staff will be faced with many difficult choices regarding safety, recreation programs, salaries and all other city services.

Can they save Lemon Grove's soul?

These are the days when La Mesa, like almost all California cities, is struggling to retain its very soul. They are the days when, faced with shrinking revenue bases and a desperate state government that must solve its own problems, La Mesa and other cities must decide what shape they are going to take for the remainder of the '90s and into the next century. Nothing remains the same and La Mesa, like the others, is in the process of deciding whether its future road is up or down.

As city governments struggle to balance their budgets and do with less, words like "downsizing" or "rightsizing" are becoming increasingly popular, but the bottom line remains that less money means less service, and the question of what services to reduce has indeed become a soul search. Public safety, education, city planning, recreation and aesthetics all vie for the role of "most important" and the decision among them is a true "Solomon's choice."

For some, the issue is clear and simple; cut everything else, if necessary, but don't touch public safety. There is certainly much truth in this approach; without safety for its citizens, nothing else can be dealt with successfully.

Without public safety we become a frightened citizenry, clinging to the bastions of our locked homes for survival.

But this is not the only truth! Also true is the belief that a city without clean and attractive streets,

In search of a soul

beautiful trees and inviting parks is an aesthetic desert, within which all the public safety in the world would not create the desire to reside.

Also true is the belief that a city without farsighted and creative planning will stagnate and rot, becoming like so many "inner cities" - places where only the poor and old remain trapped, while the more affluent move on to other greener, better-planned suburbs.

Also true is the belief that a city with no recreation for its citizens of all ages becomes a soulless bedroom community, whose citizens reside there but spend their recreational energies and money elsewhere, thus denying that the community is really their home.

Also true is the belief that the education of our children is both our primary responsibility as thoughtful family members and our investment in the future. Without excellent education, society, as we know it, is doomed to a new Dark Ages.

In his emotional appeal to the City Council at the May budget meeting, La Mesa Public Works Director Cecil Leonardo struck a resonant chord when he said, "The city is composed of much more than public safety. It is parks and streets as well. I beg you to consider the community as a whole." The city is a whole and its composite parts are each indispensable. Should the ax of severe state cuts in local revenues fall heavily on La Mesa, all parts of that whole will have to share in the reshaping of the city. The city that cuts deeply and painfully in only one or two areas and leaves others untouched will most certainly suffer as a city in the future.

The soul of any person or city is made up of a myriad of its parts and faculties. To lobotomize one or two of these is to leave the rest, no matter how competent, bereft.

Persons who lose their souls become less than whole. The same is true of cities.

"Yes - she has a fever," Anita said nervously. Then she added: "We're just waiting for her father to come out so we can take her home."

"She seen a doctor?" the woman wanted to know. "Not yet - maybe later," Anita replied. "Her father should be out here any minute, and maybe we'll take her then."

By this time the woman was right next to the car. "She needs a doctor," she said, her eyes still focused on Andrea. "He'll give her some medicine to make her better."

"We'll see what her father says when he gets here," Anita said, trying to remember if the car's rear doors were locked. "Have you seen him? He's very big, very strong."

Hey, she was scared. OK?

The woman gently stroked Andrea's blond bangs, which were plastered against her sweaty forehead. "You got money for medicine?" she asked, her voice disarmingly tender.

"I ... I think so," Anita said hesitantly, afraid that maybe she was opening herself up to some panhandling - or worse.

The woman reached into her pocket, pulled out a crumpled piece of paper and thrust it toward Anita. "For medicine," she said.

Anita took the paper and smoothed it out. It was a $10 bill.

"I can't take this from you," Anita said.

The woman's hand caressed Andrea's cheek. "For medicine," she repeated.

"But you need this much more than I do," Anita protested.

"I need to give," the woman said. "You need to let me give. For medicine."

With that the woman began to back away from the car, still transfixed by Andrea, who suddenly wasn't fussing anymore. The child and her unknown benefactor shared a smile. Then the woman turned and shuffled off down the street.

There was a sweet, peaceful feeling in the car when I finally arrived moments later.

"Sorry," I said as I slid in behind the wheel. "Hope you haven't been waiting long."

"Not too long," Anita said. "In fact, just long enough."

From Where I Sit

A chicken in every pot

by Frank Andrews

It's about time for me to drag out the "old soap box" and get some things off my chest. I'm suppose to write with a little humor mixed in, which is hard to do in these humorless times. Good news: the country is slowly coming out of a recession. Bad news: we are slowly going into a depression. I have lived through the Great Depression of the '30s, so I can be an authority on depressions.

Do you remember way back when the Republican's 1932 campaign slogan was "A car in every garage and a chicken in every pot?" If you do, raise your hand.

The times were similar to the condition of our country now. In 1929, the stock market crashed causing the biggest depression in the history of our country, which lasted all through President Herbert Hoover's single term in office. We needed a change - just like we do now.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt swamped Hoover and was elected to office three more terms, being in itself another "history making event." He had just started his fourth term when he died in the spring of 1945.

Roosevelt and WWII gave our depressed country the greatest prosperity it had ever had. The United States of America was the mightiest nation on the face of the globe. Just compare those good times with conditions now.

During the Roaring Twenties and the prohibition period, our little family always lived "high on the hog." Dad never did have to use Roosevelt's "alphabet soup." You remember, the WPA, PWA, NRA, PTA, CCC, and so on through the alphabet.

Roosevelt also started the great spending spree and created a national deficit that has grown with each president until now. How can we repair the damage that took over 60 years to accomplish?

Hoover's campaign promise has come true. Almost everyone owns a car, although few of them can fit into the garage as it is usually loaded with too many "toys of the times." (We just sold our second car, a Dodge van, that we no longer could afford to own.) The chicken in every pot has also come true as most of us are on low cholesterol diets and besides chicken is the most reasonable meat you can buy nowadays.

Clinton, Bush, or Perot: Maybe we should elect all three. Have Clinton head up the farmers, Bush take care of foreign policy, and Perot pay off our national debt with his great wealth. That sure would be a new breakthrough for all the other depressed countries to follow. If communism can be broken up in so many foreign nations why can't we have a three-president government? Why not?

If we all tighten our belts, or suspenders in some cases, we can lick this recession and live happily ever after.

'I need to give'

It had been one of those long summer afternoons, the kind that make even committed full-time homemakers like my wife, Anita, start thinking about a smoother career path - you know, like becoming a brain surgeon. Or a Middle East peace negotiator. Or lead disarmer on the police department bomb squad.

We had just moved from the nice, big house we had been living in to a cramped three-bedroom apartment about 20 minutes closer to the newspaper where I was working, and things were feeling a little crowded. Amy had been whining about one thing or another all day. Andrea seemed to be coming down with something and had been unusually fussy and cross. And Joe had been ... well, Joe.

And then I called. I had missed my bus, and it looked like I was also going to miss an important meeting at church unless Anita could come pick me up. So she put her dinner preparations on hold, loaded the kids into our beat up old car and hurried into town.

Only when she arrived in front of my office I was nowhere to be seen. A telephone call from Someone Very Important kept me upstairs while Anita and the kids waited for me outside in the sweltering late afternoon sun.

The first five minutes of waiting weren't too bad. But then Amy started to whine. Poor little Andrea, already feverish from whatever was bothering her, started to fuss in the hot, stuffy car. Joe started to be ... well, Joe. And Anita started to wonder what it was that she had ever seen in me in the first place.

It was about this time that the bag lady appeared. Anita hadn't paid much attention to her at first, pre-occupied as she was with the whining, fussing and Joe-ing that was going on in the car. But after a few minutes she noticed the elderly, unkempt woman standing just a few feet away. The woman clutched the shopping bags in her hands, but her eyes were focused on Andrea. Anita, who had slid over to the passenger seat so she could rock and cuddle the sick little girl, began to wish that she hadn't opened the door to let in more air.

Suddenly the woman began to inch toward the car. Anita looked anxiously toward my office door, hoping for a white knight but willing to settle for me.

"She sick?" the woman asked while moving ever closer to the car.

Trask honored by READ/San Diego

Bill Trask (middle), a resident of Lemon Grove and general manager of Letter-Kraft printing, receives the Community Service Award from READ/San Diego, the adult literacy program of the San Diego Public Library. The awards presentation was part of READ/San Diego's Fourth Anniversary celebration and the grand opening celebration of the Los Angeles Times Reading Lab, San Diego's first computerized educational lab free to adults, ages 16 and older, funded by a business.

Lam wins Scripps internship

Lemon Grove resident and Mt. Miguel High School student Kiet Lam is one of 26 students countywide awarded summer internships with the Scripps Research Institute and the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation.

Each intern received $1,000 from the Charter Society of Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation, as well as a chance to work with physicians or in research labs. Students were selected from those invited to attend the organization's "Young Scientist" lecture symposium for high-achieving high school students, held in March.

Water District honors Taheri

Special districts (for water, sewer, fire protection, etc.) aren't new, they've been around for almost a century. What is new is the scholarship being offered to encourage high school seniors to continue their education with the hope that they might, in the future, consider entering the field of public service.

Last week, Helix Water District awarded a $500 scholarship to Safoura Taheri, a 1992 Grossmont High School graduate, for her winning entry. Safoura was editor of Grossmont's school newspaper and an active member of the Human Relations Council. Other activities included the Multi-Cultural Club, Girls League, the World Travel Club and Club Green. Taheri volunteered at Grossmont and Alvarado hospitals, has won recognition for her work with human relations, and created an award-winning drug-free commercial.

Taheri got a taste of "real world" business when she was selected to be an intern with the John Brice & Associates public relations firm. Her college plans are to study international relations to, as she says, "... make this a better world for future generations and a better world for myself. The only way I can do this is by having a positive attitude, determination, and a good education."

In her statement on the purpose of special districts, she says, "It is important that voters be able to decide on developments in their community; people must be united in order for a city to prosper."

Special districts are run by a board of directors, elected by registered voters in the area the district serves. Special districts operate under California state law and are monitored by the San Diego Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO).

Lemon Grove Soroptimists donate $4,000 to local charities

Joan Pettis, co-pastor of the Lemon Grove Congregational United Church of Christ and outgoing president of Soroptimist International of Lemon Grove, presided over the last meeting of her presidency of the organization last Wednesday morning.

The highlight of the morning meeting was the presentation of checks totaling $4,000 which the club had raised through its annual fashion show, rummage sales, Old Time Days booth and other fund raisers.

Taking over as president is Tina Rainer, co-owner of Craft Depot at 8059 Broadway.
